

Very well connected

Experience makes for an incalculable advantage, and the 4,000 people who work for the Swiss company HUBER+SUHNER AG around the world can fall back on way over 100 years of it. The two family businesses, which merged to become HUBER+SUHNER AG in 1969, were founded in the 19th century. The stock company R+E. Huber, founded in 1882, mainly made its money from telegraph wire and cables, while Suhner & Co. AG, founded in 1864, did so from cables and cable insulation.

HUBER+SUHNER recognised the potential of photovoltaics early on. The company has been serving the market with solar cables for over 30 years, and around ten years ago HUBER+SUHNER started to expand its solar range with plug-in connectors and junction boxes. Anyone looking for connector components between the module and the inverter is in the right place at HUBER+SUHNER and will find products which are robust, flexible and long-lasting. The RADOX® insulation material represents the highest quality. HUBER+SUHNER cables are noted for their space-saving outer diameter and flexibility, the junction boxes for their excellent heat dissipation (away from the module) and a patented, thermal separation between the junction box and the module. Thanks to its own development departments and testing labs, HUBER+SUHNER is always at the leading edge of technology.

This can also be seen in the “modular junction box” concept, which consists of a basic box, a “blue box” (smart electronics) and a connector system. The system provides module manufacturers and installers more freedom in choosing their electronics supplier and the complexity of the electronic functions. The box can also easily be retrofitted and enables easy maintenance. The market launch is expected in Q2/2012.

HUBER+SUHNER has been on the Italian PV market right from the start, through the distributor AlHof, which has its headquarters in Settimo Milanese near Milan. The Swiss system solutions are in demand amongst module manufacturers and installers across Italy, from Milan to Sicily, as they are tailored to meet customers’ demands – and can be adapted if desired.
